About this book. This book gives a comprehensive account of the drafting of the EU Charter in the first Convention and shows the important contribution of this process to the constitutional development of the European Union. By drawing on a body of empirical data from the Convention in 1999–2000 it shows how the debates about a catalogue of fundamental rights for the EU prior to enlargement triggered a much wider discussion about the basis and basics of European integration.

The Drafting of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights
Draft EU Charter of fundamental rights stirs controversy. The preliminary draft EU Charter of fundamental rights, which sets out a variety of social, economic, political and civil rights, was published on 28 July 2000 to a mixed reception. For example, the European Trade Union Confederation is disappointed, owing to the perceived lack of clarity over economic and social rights and British employers believe that the draft Charter is "totally unacceptable".

Abstract This paper deals with the impact of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union on the United Kingdom and Poland after the Lisbon Treaty comes into effect. The first part briefly describes the history of drafting the Charter and focuses on the current legal status of the Charter.

APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE EU ...

The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union enshrines certain political, social, and economic rights for European Union citizens and residents into EU law. It was drafted by the European Convention and solemnly proclaimed on 7 December 2000 by the European Parliament, the Council of Ministers and the European Commission. However, its then legal status was uncertain and it did not have full legal effect until the entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon on 1 December 2009. Under the C

This book assesses the impact of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights from four key perspectives. First, it posits the Charter within the framework of the ongoing debate on EU Constitutionalism, the proper parameters of Union and Member State power, and investigates the role of "rights" discourse in crafting the contours of a European patriotism. Second, it examines the effect of the Charter on a range of substantive areas of EU regulation, ranging from foundational and fundamental areas such as the economic freedoms, to fields of competence lying at the fringe of Community regulation. This is intended to provide a flavour of how the Charter might seep in to the process of substantive law making. Third, the book describes the impact of the Charter on the question of "Access to Justice" in the EU, a highly topical and important objective, given the current debate (and indeed friction) in the case law of the Community judicature, on how the judicial architecture might be amended to improve access to justice to private parties affected adversely by Union regulation. Fourthly, the book takes an "external" lens in assessing the Charter, canvassing its relationship with the regime for protection of human rights supplied by the international plane, and examining the impact of the Charter on the process of accession of new Member States to the EU.

This book provides an analysis of key approaches to rule of law oversight in the EU and identifies deeper theoretical problems.

Die Arbeit vergleicht die verfassungsbildenden Prozesse der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika und Europa, unter besonderer Berücksichtigung bzw. mit Fokus auf die Rolle einer Grundrechtscharta. Der Text wurde im Jahre 2002 als Masterarbeit der Universität Mannheim und Adelaide, Australien angenommen, beinhaltet jedoch trotz der mittlerweile eingetretenen Entwicklungen rechtshistorischen und komparativen Wert.

The leaders of European Union member states have declared that a European constitution should take "a clear, open, effective, democratically controlled Community approach." Their goal -- that within the Union, "European institutions should be brought closer to its citizens" -- raises many questions about implementation. What is the most effective procedure for connecting citizens' preferences to political action and policy choices at the EU level? The contributors to this CESifo volume, internationally prominent economists and other scholars, address the major issues that arise in the writing of a constitution. They do so with the underlying assumption that individuals are rational actors and the goal of the state is to advance their collective interests. The ten chapters consider such topics as how a constitution might be designed to prevent military conflict, whether the EU will evolve "by default" into a federal state, the apparent contradiction between the evolutionary development of the EU and the static structure of the constitution, the definition of citizenship and rights, the division and distribution of power, the budgetary deadlock on the provision of public goods and the redistribution of resources, coordinating policy, alternative methods for choosing an EU president, and the role of such direct democracy institutions as referenda and initiatives. The editors conclude by summing up the main arguments advanced to offer a unified approach to these issues.

The European Convention presented its Draft Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe on 18 July 2003. It is the result of a pan-European debate in the Convention and the European media. The academic analysis of the future constitution also requires a European debate, and the European Constitutional Law Network is understood itself as a forum for this debate (www.ecln.net). In the present volume, twelve constitutional and European lawyers from different old and new Member States present their conclusions on different aspects of the Convention's draft constitutional Treaty. The individual essays focus on general issues of constitutional theory, the future institutional balance, the delimitation of competences, the Charter of Fundamental Rights and specific policy issues such as foreign affairs. Thus, the results of the fourth ECLN conference in autumn 2003 in Lisbon are an important contribution to the emerging European debate on the implications of the future Constitution for Europe.

Cast along the premise that the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights is an instance of EU politics and international human rights codification, this book focuses on its creation: from the mandate of Cologne to the eventual outcome of Lisbon. The study analyses the initiative to draft the Charter, the actors then involved in the drafting process, the process itself and its end result. This book builds upon existing studies on the subject, bringing to the debate a pool of extensive empirical evidence collected over a crucial period of time during the Charter process.
