Cooper, Robertson & Partners was founded on the premise that it could best serve its clients and, at the same time, meet its own professional goals by pursuing excellence in the two closely related fields of architecture and urban design. The underlying and unifying theme of the firm's work is the belief that architecture, planning, landscape, and urban design are interconnected disciplines that must be taken together if lasting quality and value are to be achieved. An impressive selection of the firm's urban design work is presented here and includes everything from designing entire towns, new communities, and campuses from scratch to re-imagining existing cities, waterfronts, campuses, and public open spaces.
