Manfredo Tafuri, theorist, critic and academic, was described by one commentator as the world's most important architectural historian of the second half of the 20th century. He is noted for his pointed critiques of the partisan "operative criticism" of previous architectural historians and critics like Bruno Zevi and Siegfried Giedion and for challenging the idea that the Renaissance was a "golden age" as it had been characterised in the work of early historian of the second half of the 20th century, Manfredo Tafuri stirred up controversy by criticising modern architecture's alliance with capitalism. Like other celebrities – though these are more usually found in the world of entertainment than in architectural history – a remarkable reputation has accrued to Manfredo Tafuri, furthering the spread of his name and his books; but it has also distorted his message, encouraging the miscomprehension of his thought.

Untying what Manfredo Tafuri called the “theoretical knot that must be confronted to construct a history” has taken many forms in the modern era: from the assertions of autonomy common to the art-historical discipline since the 1900s and the claims for “history” to actively inform practice from Giedion to Zevi to the introduction of theories from disciplines outside architecture with the aim of re-reading the discipline—“rewriting the book of architecture” as Foucault called it.

Abstract. The essay is an analysis of Tafuri's theory on historiography; it traces his methodological sources: the theories, and their mode of reception, that have directly influenced his thought. The period examined starts with Theories and History of Architecture, first published in 1968 and ends with "The Historical 'Project'", the introductory essay of The Sphere and the Labyrinth, published in 1980. The first chapter outlines the intertwining of the two neo-idealist and Marxist components ...

Writing, according to Panayotis Tournikiotis, has always exerted a powerful influence on architecture. Indeed, the study of modern architecture cannot be separated from a fascination with the texts that have tried to explain the idea of a new architecture in a new society. During the last forty years, the question of the relationship of architecture to its history -- of buildings to books -- has been one of the most important themes in debates about the course of modern architecture. Tournikiotis argues that the history of modern architecture tends to be written from the present, projecting back onto the past our current concerns, so that the "beginning" of the story really functions as a "representation" of its end. In this book the buildings are the quotations, while the texts are the structure. Tournikiotis focuses on a group of books by major historians of the twentieth century: Nikolaus Pevsner, Emil Kaufmann, Sigfried Giedion, Bruno Zevi, Leonardo Benevolo, Henry-Russell Hitchcock, Reyner Banham, Peter Collins, and Manfredo Tafuri. In examining these writers' thoughts, he draws on concepts from critical theory, relating architecture to broader historical models.

In this study of the process of decision-making about building and urban planning in Venice, the author examines the intersections of Venetian culture from the beginning of the 16th century to the first decades of the 17th to show how that process affected the choice of designers and styles.
